Shepherd, stationed at that post, was shot by a Navahoe Indian, within a mile from the garrison. As friendly relations existed with the tribe, and as no danger, in any event, was apprehended like the insect fluttering around the at a spot so near to the military station, the soldier was wholly unarmed. The owes his destruction to the dazzling obsavage, taking advantage of this circum stance, out of pure malice, and, so far as appears, without any provocation, transfixed him with an arrow. Whether it was poisoned or not is unknown; but the wound it inflicted was so severe that the man died on the following day.

The matter being taken up by the commanding officer, it was contended on the part of the tribe, that it was simply a case of individual murder; and that the nation, as such, not having sanctioned of sin in the first Psalm, "He walks in the crime, were not responsible for its the counsel of the ungodly," then "stands commission. A demand for the delivery of the offender being made, however, a grand "juntos," or council of the tribe, was held about the 20th of October at a place some sixty miles distant from the these remarks, guard against every avefort, to consider the question of giving him up. The Indian Agent, Capt. Dodge, seems to have been present upon the occasion. As the offender was a "pelado," or a pennyless-person—one of a class which constitutes a large majority of the nation-but little expectation was entertained that they would come to the concomment on this one fur her than to say that we clusion of delivering him up. It seems that hitherto, in their dealings with the Mexicans, they have been in the habit of making recompense for the taking of human life, by giving over horses, cattle, and sheep, in quantities proportioned to the importance of their victim. This custom formed an additional ground of doubt as to their compliance with the requisition. The Navahoes are the most numerous people in all that country. But, although the largest, it is estimated that they are not so difficult to wage war against as the Utahs. The former, for the most part, lead a pastoral life, their property consists of flocks and herds: while the latter are more wandering, worthless and warlike in their habits and subsist by hunting, fishing and

In spite of all probabilities, however, it seems that the Council finally concluded to give up the offender. So, at all events, they promised Captain Dodge, who was present. Whether they will fulfill their pledges or not is another question. Perhaps as much doubt may be entertained of that as was entertained of their giving the promise at all. In case of their non-compliance, hostilities will necessarily grow out of the affair : fully "parcelled" out as though the deaas an example of an unpunished murder of this kind would be most disastrous in its influence upon the surrounding tribes.

That region is but a wild and lawless district at best, and American commanding officers there are necessarily vested with a wide discretion-with something like pro-consular powers. The incident related, and numberless others of a like character, illustrate the necessity of a speedy compliance with the President's message which recommends an increase in the army. It is absolutely necessary to the protection of the frontier. Perhaps another recommendation, contained in the same document, of equal importance, is of equal propriety, and greater justice-namely, an increase of pay for those who are engaged in this hard service.

As things now exist, we find gentlemen of military education, of experience and talets, after fifteen or twenty years of service, living upon a salary less than that of a clerk in a dry goods store; and that, after numberless exposures in battle, and a life of constant hardships, vi cissitudes and danger, upon our unquiet and savage western border. Let this be looked to at once. Let no political huckstering defeat it-no party movements overshadow it. It is but justice; and a great nation, with an overflowing treasury, can have no excuse for refusing it.

THE POWER OF TEMPLATION. The Christian Intelligencer discusses this subject thus beautifully and forci-

No man becomes altogether abandoned at once, but is prepared by degrees for acts of enormity. The cloud which looks small as a man's hand increases till it covers the whole sky. Men whose characters at one period could not be sullied with the breath of calumny, become at length the finished pictures of deprayrial oil LAMPS, GIRANDOLES, CANDELA- ity. Sensibilities once so tender as to shrink from the touch of vice, become at last hardened and callous. In addition to the original proneness to evil in the human heart, there is either in the constitution of man, the nature of vice, or in their mutual influence, such a tendency to repetition that a succession of sins is apt to accompany one sinful compliance. Inadequate conception of the persua sions of vice, in its different aspects and modes of temptation, must tend in a high degree to facilitate its progress. To what length may we be carried, by yielding to temptation in a single instance, it is impossible for us to know: but of one thing we are certain, that it is easier to hold fast our integrity than to recover it after it is gone. The progress of vice is gradual and insiduous at arst, and the complete character of depravity is formed by slow degrees, more and more accelerated in the course. > OLD DEACON SAFFORD.-Old Deacon Safford-or as he was familiarly called. Deacon Jo-was a rigid disiplinarian, and being the senior church deacon, looked after the delinquents with a sharp eye. Deacon Jo was in the babit of Parcelling out the sermon," giving to each one of the congregation their portion according as they needed.

One warm Sabbath afternoon, the pastor, thinking that those who had no interest in the subject of religion would most likely fall asleep, prepared himself to preach directly to the church. The deacon was on hand, to "parcel" out the sermon as fast as it came from the lips of the minister. The pastor commenced with his close fisted, penurious brethren, plainty but earnestly.

"That belongs to brother Grant," said

The next remark was designed for those who went about doing good, but made so much noise and parade about it. as to destroy a great part of the good they intended to do.

"That is Sister Grimpkins," said Deacon Jo, "no mistaking that."

The pastor continued his sermon, but the deacon had worked hard through the week, fell into a dozing slumber. Nevertheless, although the body of the deacon was sleeping, the mind was active. and, whether ears performed their functions or not, each portion was as faithcon had been wide awake.

"Finally, my brethren," concluded the parson, "there is a class of persons who listen attentively to every sermon, but who are so free-hearted and benevolent, that they do not retain any for themselves, but parcel it out among their brethren and sisters."

"That's me, by thunder !" said Deacon Jo, the sound of his voice awaking him, "and I desarve it!"

Whether the deacon continued the practice of "parcelling out the sermon" afterward, we are unable to say, but we presume if he did, that he kept a small portion for himself.

A CURIOUS SURPRISE.—A SEVEN YEARS' SLEEP.—TAKEN BY SURPRISE.—A letter from San Francisco to Mr. R. R. Harris, of Rochester, N. Y., from his brother. relates a curious incident that occurred there a short time since, which we do not recollect having seen in print. Her Britannic Majesty's exploring ship Plover arrived at San Francisco a short time since from the Polar Sea, where she had been ice bound since 1847. When she left San Francisco, some years ago, it was a mere trading station, resorted to by a few vessels in pursuit of hides, and the town or place contained only a few adobe houses. The captain and crew of the Plover expected to find the same San Francisco in 1854 that they left in 1847. The captain, therefore, sailed into the bay without a pilot. and approached the city in the evening. He was much amazed at the numerous lights he saw. When he awoke from his dream of seven years the next morning, he found a noble city occupying the site of the ancient San Francisco. He had known nothing of the Mexican war and cession of California to the United States, and the many other great events that had taken place during the time he had been locked up in the regions of the north.

Russia.-In the seventy-seven years intervening between 1772 and 1849, the Russian empire increased in population from fourteen millions to upwards of sixty-six millions, or at the rate of about fourteen millions in every twenty years. This wonderful increase is chiefly attributable to the enlarged area of the empire, caused by the addition of Poland, Finland, and the Caucasus to its dominions. If Russia should conquer and annex Turkey, her population would exceed eighty millions-almost equaling the combined population of England, France, and the United States.
